results in more detail. Dr Simoncini gets to the core of cancer's pathological anatomy, considering also the mind-body-spirit connection, and rules out the "bluff" of genetics, multiple factors and cancer statistics in understanding the true nature of the disease. When orthodox treatments like chemotherapy give patients at best a seven per cent chance of survival, there has to be better ways. And a better way there is when the origin and genesis of tumours is understood in terms of pathogenic fungi. The Candida fungus is explained in terms of its opportunistic behaviour, its similar genetic structure to cancer, its constant presence in cancer tumours and the phenomenon of metastasis. Dr Simoncini outlines his many years of oncological research and his therapy using sodium bicarbonate as a logical solution to the cancer problem. He gives examples of specific bicarb soda therapies to treat cancers of the pharynx, stomach, liver, abdomen, intestines, spleen, pancreas, bladder, prostate, brain, lung, breast, skin and more. Plus, he addresses the arguably more intractable problems of dealing with conformist medical practices, politics and economics that prevent a simple, cheap therapy from reaching the masses.

Dr Simoncini sounds a passionate rallying cry for an effort of association, cooperation and even "spiritual complicity" to dismantle the mistakes and lies of orthodox cancer thinking and treatment and to shed light on appropriate structures and equipment that can restore hope to millions around the world. The clinical case studies bear witness in this most promising, accessible answer to cancer.

AETHER: The Transcript by various contributors

Einstein may have put the dampener on the aether, but over a century later thinkers from all walks of life are part of a new awareness of the aether—a concept that goes back at least to the ancient Greeks. This compilation, a transcript of eight hours of interviews (also available on CD-ROM), brings together engineers, scientists, ecologists, healing practitioners and artists with their views on this concept which, to some, is so tangible that it constitutes the substrate, the matrix, of our physical reality and to others is the stuff of aetheric realms. It's safe to say that the aether is understood in many cultures by different names, and there are diverse ideas held about it.

The brains and narrator behind this UK-based project, with interviews recorded in 2004–06, is producer Michael Finesilver, and the commentators include electrical engineer/scientist Nick Thomas, biologist/ecologist Margaret Colquhoun, physicist Ian Thompson, biologist Brian Goodwin, actor/esoterist Patrick Dixon, Scientific and Medical Network program director David Lorimer, healer/clairvoyant Yiannis Pittis, sculptor/Flowforms inventor John Wilkes and more. A substantial section comprises "The Engineer's Report", where Thomas engages with contributors on the deeply relevant question, "What's Missing that Makes Science Such a Turn-off?" Turning the tables on scientific basics, these specialists discuss polarity, consciousness, light/dark, gravity/gravitation, chaos or cosmos against the backdrop of the aether.

In the "bigger picture" discussion, this ancient idea is interpreted in terms of modern struggles. The central tenets are to see the aether as a pre-physical matrix for new forms, and regard knowledge as power—for if ideas and thoughts are real, then the aether is real. There are many gems for the serious, the practical and the imaginative alike.

Transit time of food in the digestive should be 18 - 24 hours, longer and food ferments, then putrefies, leaching toxins into the blood - the foundation of many diseases. It's estimated that over 80% of the population may be infested with parasites that make your body their home, stealing your nutrients, drinking your blood, taking your energy and excreting their faeces into your system.
